

Modern Slavery and Human Trafficking Statement

Introduction

Burgess Farms (including their divisions Burgess Farm Produce and RBOrganic) is a family owned business that supplies the UK with quality fresh vegetables, providing produce into major retailers, food service and food manufacturing customers. As of 30 June 2020, we employed just under 500 people and sourced our raw materials from 7 countries.

We know that slavery, servitude, forced labour, compulsory labour and human trafficking is a significant issue given the increase in global migration. Burgess Farms has a zero-tolerance approach to any kind of modern slavery found within our own operations or our supply chain.

Our policies

Burgess Farms have in place policies that set out our ambition, processes, and resources to ensure our products are produced to acceptable standards worldwide. This will aid our employees to identify and report any concerns with modern slavery via the appropriate channels and allow a full investigation without putting any of our staff or those affected at risk.

Risk management and Due Diligence processes

We understand that our end to end produce supply chains are our biggest exposure to modern slavery and applying thorough auditing and compliance standards will help us mitigate the risks of modern slavery within our business. Our due diligence focuses on 4 sections within the supply chain:

- Our own packing sites
We have embraced third party audits for over 10 years to the ETI Base Code using the SMETA standard. We also operate Site Employee Forums where nominated employees play an active role in the welfare and wellbeing of colleagues across the site. We also offer an 'Employee Assistance Programme', a free 24-hour confidential help line for support and advice.

- Our use of agency labour
We conduct audits of our agency providers to the requirements of the Gangmasters and Labour Abuse Authority and Ethical Trading Initiative. These audits involve in-depth interviews with employees and head office management to help identify any indicators of modern slavery. All agency labour used are licenced by the GLAA.
- Our suppliers' sites
We require the fulfilment of ethical documentation for all sites. All suppliers to the sites are risk assessed and approved prior to commencement of supply. The Sedex RADAR risk assessment system is utilised alongside our in-depth knowledge of our suppliers and their countries. Ethical audits are undertaken for all high-risk suppliers and conducted by trained social compliance auditors. Full visibility and transparency of our supply chains is ensured through end to end chain mapping using a bespoke supplier approval system.
- Our suppliers' use of agency labour
We conduct risk assessments and active checks of all UK agency providers declared by our suppliers. All our suppliers are clear on the expectation that specific and detailed checks are completed into their agency provision.

Risk of Modern Slavery within our supply chain

In terms of understanding our greatest risk, we have put considerable resources into addressing the use of agency labour in the UK as well as focusing overseas on our high-risk sources of supply.

We recognise that audits alone will not identify all instances of modern slavery but building relationships, capacity and trust with suppliers is much more critical when it comes to preventing and identifying the incidence of modern slavery.

Modern Slavery training

Collaboration and stakeholder engagement are important areas for us in identifying and preventing modern slavery within our supply chain. We have also invested in team members to have a more detailed understanding of ethical standards to equip them with the knowledge and skills to perform detailed audits across our supply chain. Our Technical and HR teams regularly attend industry events to be well-briefed on current best practice.

We actively promote the Stronger Together initiative, where all our production and agency teams have viewed the Stronger Together video on forced labour and the use of posters in relevant languages throughout the sites to reinforce the messages.

We will complete a group wide employee engagement survey to understand the employee voice as well as conducting additional training focusing on modern slavery through purchasing practices.

Next steps to prevent Modern Slavery

We believe that leadership makes all the difference in an effective response. At our production facilities and in our supply chains the senior management teams of each area are responsible for compliance in their respective departments and for their supplier relationships.

Our focus over the next year will be to continue to work closely with our colleagues and suppliers to identify and address modern slavery, with extra focus regarding onboarding and recruitment to prevent illegal work, discrimination, and exploitation. We will continue to implement new initiatives to identify and address the risks of slavery and human trafficking.

Assessment of effectiveness in preventing Modern Slavery

To assess the effectiveness of the steps taken by Burgess Farms we will be monitoring the following key performance indicators:

- All high-risk suppliers have been ethically audited.
- All produce suppliers are registered on Sedex.
- All supervisors have been trained on indicators of forced labour.
- All sites have completed an employee engagement survey.
